

Best Places to Buy Hydroponics Supplies Online

Many gardeners believe that good soil is the root of all healthy plants. They till into and toil over their soil for hours on end. The truth is that plants can live very nicely without any soil at all. This notion of "soil less gardening" is what gave rise to the hydroponics revolution.

Plants need nutrients to survive, not soil. Normally, the earth's soil is what contains the essential nutrients required for the growth and maintenance of plants. These same nutrients, however, can be supplied through other means, like the water used in hydroponics gardening.

Many gardeners prefer hydroponics to traditional gardening. Without soil, there is less mess and hassle, but there are other benefits as well. People can set up a hydroponics garden just about anywhere. It's ideal for those living in apartments and other close quarters and, gardeners can grow a greater volume of plants in less space.
